ANNUAL REPORT
OF THE
TERRITORIAL SUPERINTENDENT OF COMMON SCHOOLS,
FOR THE YEAR 1868.

SUPERINTENDENT'S OFFICE,
Salt Lake City, U, T., Feb. 16, 1869.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of Utah Territory.

Gentlemen:—In making his annual report to your honorable body, the Superintendent of Schools takes occasion to present such features and make such suggestions as during the past year have come under his notice and been presented to his mind, in relation to the educational interests of the Territory.

STATISTICS.

The collection of school returns, which hitherto has been attended with much difficulty, has this season been almost impossible, in consequence of the absence of so many of the Trustees, who have been engaged directly or indirectly in the construction of the great national railroad. Returns have, however, at a very late date, been obtained, which, in several counties, are incomplete. From Summit County there is no report whatever. The importance, however, of obtaining and forwarding reports punctually, must not be forgotten, as it forms a valuable feature in connection with our school interests, and one which has not been overlooked by your honorable body:

VISITING SCHOOLS—MORAL TRAINING ENCOURAGED.

The Superintendent has taken much pleasure in visiting and inspecting the schools in most of the leading counties of the Territory. While on these visits he has enjoyed many opportunities of advising with County Superintendents and Trustees in relation to their respective sectional school interests, and is happy to note that unanimity generally characterizes the efforts of the school authorities. He has also enjoyed many opportunities of introducing and canvassing the subject of education before the people, and feels conscious that his feeble efforts in that direction will bring forth fruit which will be productive of good to our school interests. The morality and manners of the pupils have not been forgotten. These have been placed in the foreground as, in many instances, he found that little interest had been manifested by school teachers in relation thereto, and where these are neglected the educational picture must be defective. To educate the intellect and to neglect the heart would be to introduce a state of things to be deplored rather than to be admired. The school teacher who does not appreciate the importance of moral training, and pays little or no attention to the subject in his school, fails to produce that good to the commonwealth for which his position in life so eminently qualifies him. On the other hand, the teacher who makes this one of his specialties, will have occasion in after life to feel the truth of that scriptural passage: Whatever ye sow that ye shall reap.

When the plastic nature of the infant mind is taken into consideration, who can estimate the amount of good a few words spoken on appropriate occasions may do, in admonishing the youth and forewarning them of those snares in life to which all are subject? Mathematics furnish no rule by which it can be estimated, nevertheless the immutable law of ethics can be implicitly relied on, that the good we do to others shall return to us.

NORMAL SCHOOL.

The Superintendent urges upon the Legislative Assembly the importance of establishing and maintaining a Normal School, in which the youth of the Territory can be qualified for acting in the important sphere of school teacher. There is not anything connected with the educational interests of the Territory which demands attention more than this. The universal interrogatory by School Trustees from every part of the Territory, who are attending to their duties, is: can you send us a qualified teacher? Were there a provision in the School Code requiring a per centage from the money realized from the sale of estrays in each county, to be applied towards the maintenance of such a school, the same might be established forthwith. There should be some statute regulations pertaining to the government of such school. The inauguration of the same would involve a considerable amount of means in the procuring of a lot and the erection of a suitable building and school furniture. This school, and the furniture connected therewith, should be a model, and its Professors and Teachers of superior ability.

The establishment of such a school by law, under such liberal regulations as would enable the diligent student (whose parents might be unable to afford him the opportunity of prosecuting his studies), to qualify himself for the duties of teacher is, in the opinion of your humble servant, the best step that could be taken by your honorable body to promote educational interests.

FREE SCHOOLS.

The subject of free schools has been recommended by the acting Governor and many influential citizens. In a few of the counties this desirable status in relation to schools might be attained by the assessment of a very high tax; but legislators from other counties represent that it would involve the assessment of such a heavy tax as but few of their constituents would be willing to pay.

It is to be hoped that, soon, Utah will emerge from Territorial dependency into the full enjoyment of her rights as a State, when the lands appropriated by the general government will be accorded to her citizens, and a fund realized, from which free schools can be sustained in the midst of the inhabitants of these mountains, who penetrated the Great American Desert and reclaimed it from the barrenness and sterility of nature, and rendered it the desirable abode of civilization.

ENGLISH ORTHOGRAPHY.

When the child goes to school it commences with the letters of the alphabet and builds these into words; when further advanced it spells and defines the important words in its lesson; soon a spelling book is in its possession, and when sufficient progress is made, a grammar is used as a text book, the first part of which treats of Orthography. It may therefore truthfully be asserted that the subject of orthography underlies an English education. To affirm that the orthography of our language is defective, contradictory and absurd, is to reiterate a truism admitted by the best English scholars.

In this century, to go no further back, societies have been formed in England as well as in America, for the avowed purpose of correcting the orthography of our language; many new alphabets have been invented and published to the world. The phonetic alphabet, invented by Mr. Isaac Pittman, of Bath, England, has enlisted the most disciples, and is an accredited reform of the age; though its friends are but few, and the circle of its operations limited, when compared with the millions that speak the English tongue, the extent which it is spread over the world, and the learning and means of those who use it as a vehicle of communication.

The inhabitants of these mountains are pre-eminent for reform. They hail every invention and discovery as a blessing from Heaven to man, and fail not to acknowledge the Source whence all blessings emanate.

When Pittman's system of phonetics was introduced in Illinois by Mr. Geo. D. Watt, in the year 1845, the leading men of this community immediately adopted it, and the same has been taught in almost every nook and corner of these mountain settlements.

It has been asserted that English orthography is defective; wherein will be readily observed, when it is remembered that there are only twenty-six letters in the alphabet, to represent the forty elementary sounds, philologists affirm, there are heard in speaking the English tongue. To supply this defect it becomes necessary that some letters represent more than one sound; and letters are combined to represent sounds for which there are no single representatives. For instance: In Appleton's new American Encyclopedia, it is asserted that the letter a "represents at least seven distinct simple sounds of the voice" which "are heard in the words mate, mat, mare, mart, ball, many, what. Other distinct sounds are denoted by this letter when used in proper names, a remarkable instance of which is the famous street in London, spelled Pall Mall, which is pronounced Pell Mell. The letter a is also frequently coupled with other letters to represent the same simple elementary sound that it does when standing alone—as in the words maid, pear and straight. It is often found united with other letters, also, when it represents no sound at all, or has, in fact, lost its local value entirely, as in the words boat, beat and beauty. In proper names the use of a in combination with other vowel letters is sometimes quite ludicrous; as in the distinguished English name spelt Beauchamp, and pronounced Beecham. The primary sound of the letter a (as in mate) is also represented in thirty-three different ways, by combinations of nine other letters. These various uses of this letter, together with other similar incongruities, tend to render the acquisition of the English language very difficult to foreigners."

Dr. Worcester affirms that the vowels e and i have five sounds each, o and u six sounds each, and y four sounds.

"In the common Romanicalphabet, says Pitman, the child is taught to call the letter O owe, as in so, and it innocently supposes this pretty oval mark "O" to be called owe, as invariably as this mark "8" is called eight. The teacher presents the little word to to the notice of his pupil; but the instruction of yesterday must be contradicted to-day, as O is no longer owe but oo. This is an anomaly which the child may perceive, but which the teacher can neither explain nor remove. The difficulty, however, is mastered—the fact that to is not toe but too is committed to memory—it is not understood, and the teacher proceeds. N-o-t may be the next word; but will the knowledge that has been imparted enable the child to decipher this simple word? The teacher must now explain, if he can, that O is neither owe nor oo, but short aw, and that the word is pronounced not. The child, if he be an intelligent one, will not fail to wonder at being taught one day that which proves to be untrue the next. The next word may be l-o-v-e; again the letter O occurs; but will either of the three names by which it has been called, enable the child to pronounce this word? No! The teacher must begin anew, deny all he has said respecting this letter, and inform his little charge that this word must be pronounced as if spelled l-u-v. Proceeding further it is discovered that O has another sound, as in women, and still another, as in wolf, woman, etc.

"These anomalies and contradictions, which belong more or less to every letter of the alphabet, do greater violence to the moral perceptions of the child than is commonly imagined. The Persians said, the first thing to teach a child is to speak the truth; the first thing we teach children seems to be not unlike a mass of literal falsehoods."

But here the absurdities of English orthography do not end, for there is not only a multitude of sounds for the same sign, but the same sound has a multitude of signs as is very clearly shown in the list of diphthongs, digraphs, trigraphs, double consonants and substitutes published in Harvey's English Grammar: *

* A diphthong consists of two vowels sounded together in the same syllable.

There are two diphthongal sounds, represented by four diphthongs, viz.: ou, ow, oi, oy, as in foul, now, boil, cloy.

A digraph consists of two vowel letters written together in the same syllable, one only being pronounced, or both representing a single elementary sound.

There are twenty-four digraphs, viz.: aa, Canaan; ai, gain; ao, gaol; au, maul; aw, maw; ay, may; ea, meat; ee, need; ei, ceiling; er, people; eu, feud; ew, new; ey, they; ie, lie; oa, coat; oe, foe; oi, avoidrupois; oo, moon; ou, tour; ow, flow; ua, guard; ue, sue; ui, guise; uy, buy.

A trigraph consists of three vowel letters written together in the same syllable, one only being pronounced, or the three together representing a single vowel sound, or diphthong.

There are seven trigraphs, viz.: aye, aye; awe, awe; eau, beau, beauty; cou, gorgeous; eye, eye; ieu, lieu; iew, view;

In such words as Christian, alien, union, i does not form a digraph with the following vowel, but is a substitute for y. In the unaccented termination cean, cial, ston, tion, the combinations ce, ci, si, ti, are substitutes for sh.

In such words as herbaceous, gracious, precious, e and i do not form trigraphs with the following vowels, but the combinations ce, ci are substitutes for sh.

Double consonants consist of two consonant letters written together in the same syllable, representing a single elementary sound.

which renders the task of acquiring the present system of English orthography one of the most difficult of human attainments to a native scholar, and so great to a foreigner as nearly to preclude the possibility of ever expecting to acquire it perfectly, thus "restricting the influence of English literature on the mind of the world."

The design of the Deseret system is to teach the spelling and reading of the English language in an easy manner. The principal feature is to reduce to simplicity English orthography, and to denude the words used of every superfluous character. In this system the child is taught the thirty-eight letters which represent the number of sounds heard in speaking the English language. Each letter of the alphabet represents a definite sound, as fixed as any one of the digits which invariably represents the same power. The acquirement of reading, therefore, is divested of the uncertainty, contradiction, and difficulty which attend the acquisition of the present system.

To discuss further this matter in an annual report would be inappropriate, but as the subject of orthography meets us at every step in the school-room, and as laudable efforts are being put forth to introduce this important and indispensable reform, the Superintendent could not do less than endorse a movement which augurs so much good to the cause of education. Could sufficient reasons be assigned for following in the footsteps of the fathers in this false system of orthography, we might forbear an innovation which completely upsets the present system, but to hold on to the same, and weave the web of inconsistency and falsehood around the feet of the present and future generations, which tradition and learned bigotry have woven around the past, would be to allow our children to turn round and have it truthfully to say of us as we can of our ancestors.

"Surely our fathers have inherited lies, vanity, and things wherein there was no profit."

Respectfully submitted by,

ROB'T. L. CAMPBELL,
Territorial Superintendent of Schools.
